

CAMPUS CAMP 2008

The campus students of Trinity participated in the campus camp last December, and all were challenged to leave behind a mark – a God imprint – in their campuses and communities. Here's what participants say.

INFINITY

Did you leave something
behind?
I hope so.

This year's camp was, in one word, amazing. It taught me that God can meet His people anytime and anywhere He wishes to, as long as their hearts are turned to Him. I came to camp expecting a touch from God and an impartation with regards to my destiny, and God did not disappoint me!

Through the Campus Camp, God has refreshed my mind and soul. He gave me a vision for my campus: To start a new cell group in NTU, tailor-made for the foreign students studying in Singapore, and to train them up to be leaders who will impact nations. I thank God for giving me this great vision.

This camp was different from previous camps because the Campus Camp felt 'grown-up'; it felt like Church Camp, and I like that. There was a good mixture of games as well as teaching. I especially love Pastor Keet Keong's experiential workshop, because I gained the most from it. It made me reflect on how sometimes in life I strive for things that do not last, when I should be focusing on things that are eternal.

Pastor Keet Keong showed his true genius with the experiential game he created, St. Nias. In this game campers were to grab as much power, money, and fame as possible. Think: Xbox face-offs, gambling dens, and basketball showdowns. The goal of the Saints was very different from that of St. Nias town folks – they had to get as many people 'saved' as possible. This game depicts real life with startling accuracy. It climaxed with the re-enactment of the great battle between Jesus Christ and Satan. We know who won, of course. And what better way to end then with an all-time-favourite water-bomb battle!

Camp was a good time of being refreshed after a hectic year and gaining new purpose and direction in life! I went with a lot of expectations, and God fulfilled every single one of them.

This camp taught me to have a heart for my generation. Most of the time, we think of how to survive our various commitments in school, family, studies, relationships, and even church. It's a never-ending list. But survival isn't the point; God desires for us to love this generation – something I am still learning, slowly but surely. I found my cell members really growing a lot from the camp, being blessed by it, and in turn, being a blessing to others!

Campus Camp taught me many things. I was in the camp committee and we faced insurmountable problems in the course of planning for it. But praying and seeing God resolve all of them strengthened my faith. Camp also taught me discipline, of having the dedication to set aside time, in the midst of everything, to seek God, pray and reflect upon His word. It was also an awakening of God's plans for my life and brought many long dormant dreams that He had once placed in my heart, back to the fore. One such dream was that my parents would come to accept Christ. Over time, this dream had died due to rejections and mindsets. Now, I pray and look for times where I can share the word of God with my parents.

The campus camp served as a good closure for me as I was entering a new phase in life. Each game played had a specific learning objective, the workshop topics were relevant and insightful, and I was impacted greatly through the services. Through the camp, I found the courage and assurance to embrace my destiny.

Lim Yu Qing, electrical and electronic engineering graduate
Nanyang Technological University

God assured me during camp that He has a greater purpose for me as a campus student. I didn't do well that semester and was rather upset about it as I was on a scholarship and needed to meet some criteria to remain in it. After returning from camp, I received an email saying that I was wrongly given a lower grade due to a programming error. Praise God! My grades were adjusted upwards in the most unexpected way!

God also reminded me of His faithfulness that He will be there for me always and He has put me there to impact my community. I have made a commitment during the camp to walk in the destiny He has for me!
